

Narrator: The Pilgrims left England in search of a new world where they could have religious freedom.

Pilgrim: Heavenly Father has brought us to this land where we can worship in peace.

Pilgrim: Let us pray and give thanks to show our gratitude.

Narrator: The Pilgrims knelt down together and prayed. Then they began to build their new town that they named Plymouth.

Pilgrim: What will we do to protect us from the Indians?

Pilgrim: We will make friends with the Indians.

Narrator: The Indians approached the Pilgrims!

Native American: We will be your friends.

Native American: We bring you gifts.

Pilgrim: Will you teach us how to plant corn?

Native American: Yes. We will teach you.

Native American: You plant the seed too deep.

Pilgrim: So the birds can't get them!

Native American: Sun can't get them either.

Pilgrim: Thank you!

Pilgrim: We will now have a good crop.

Narrator: The Indians and Pilgrims were good friends and taught each other many things.

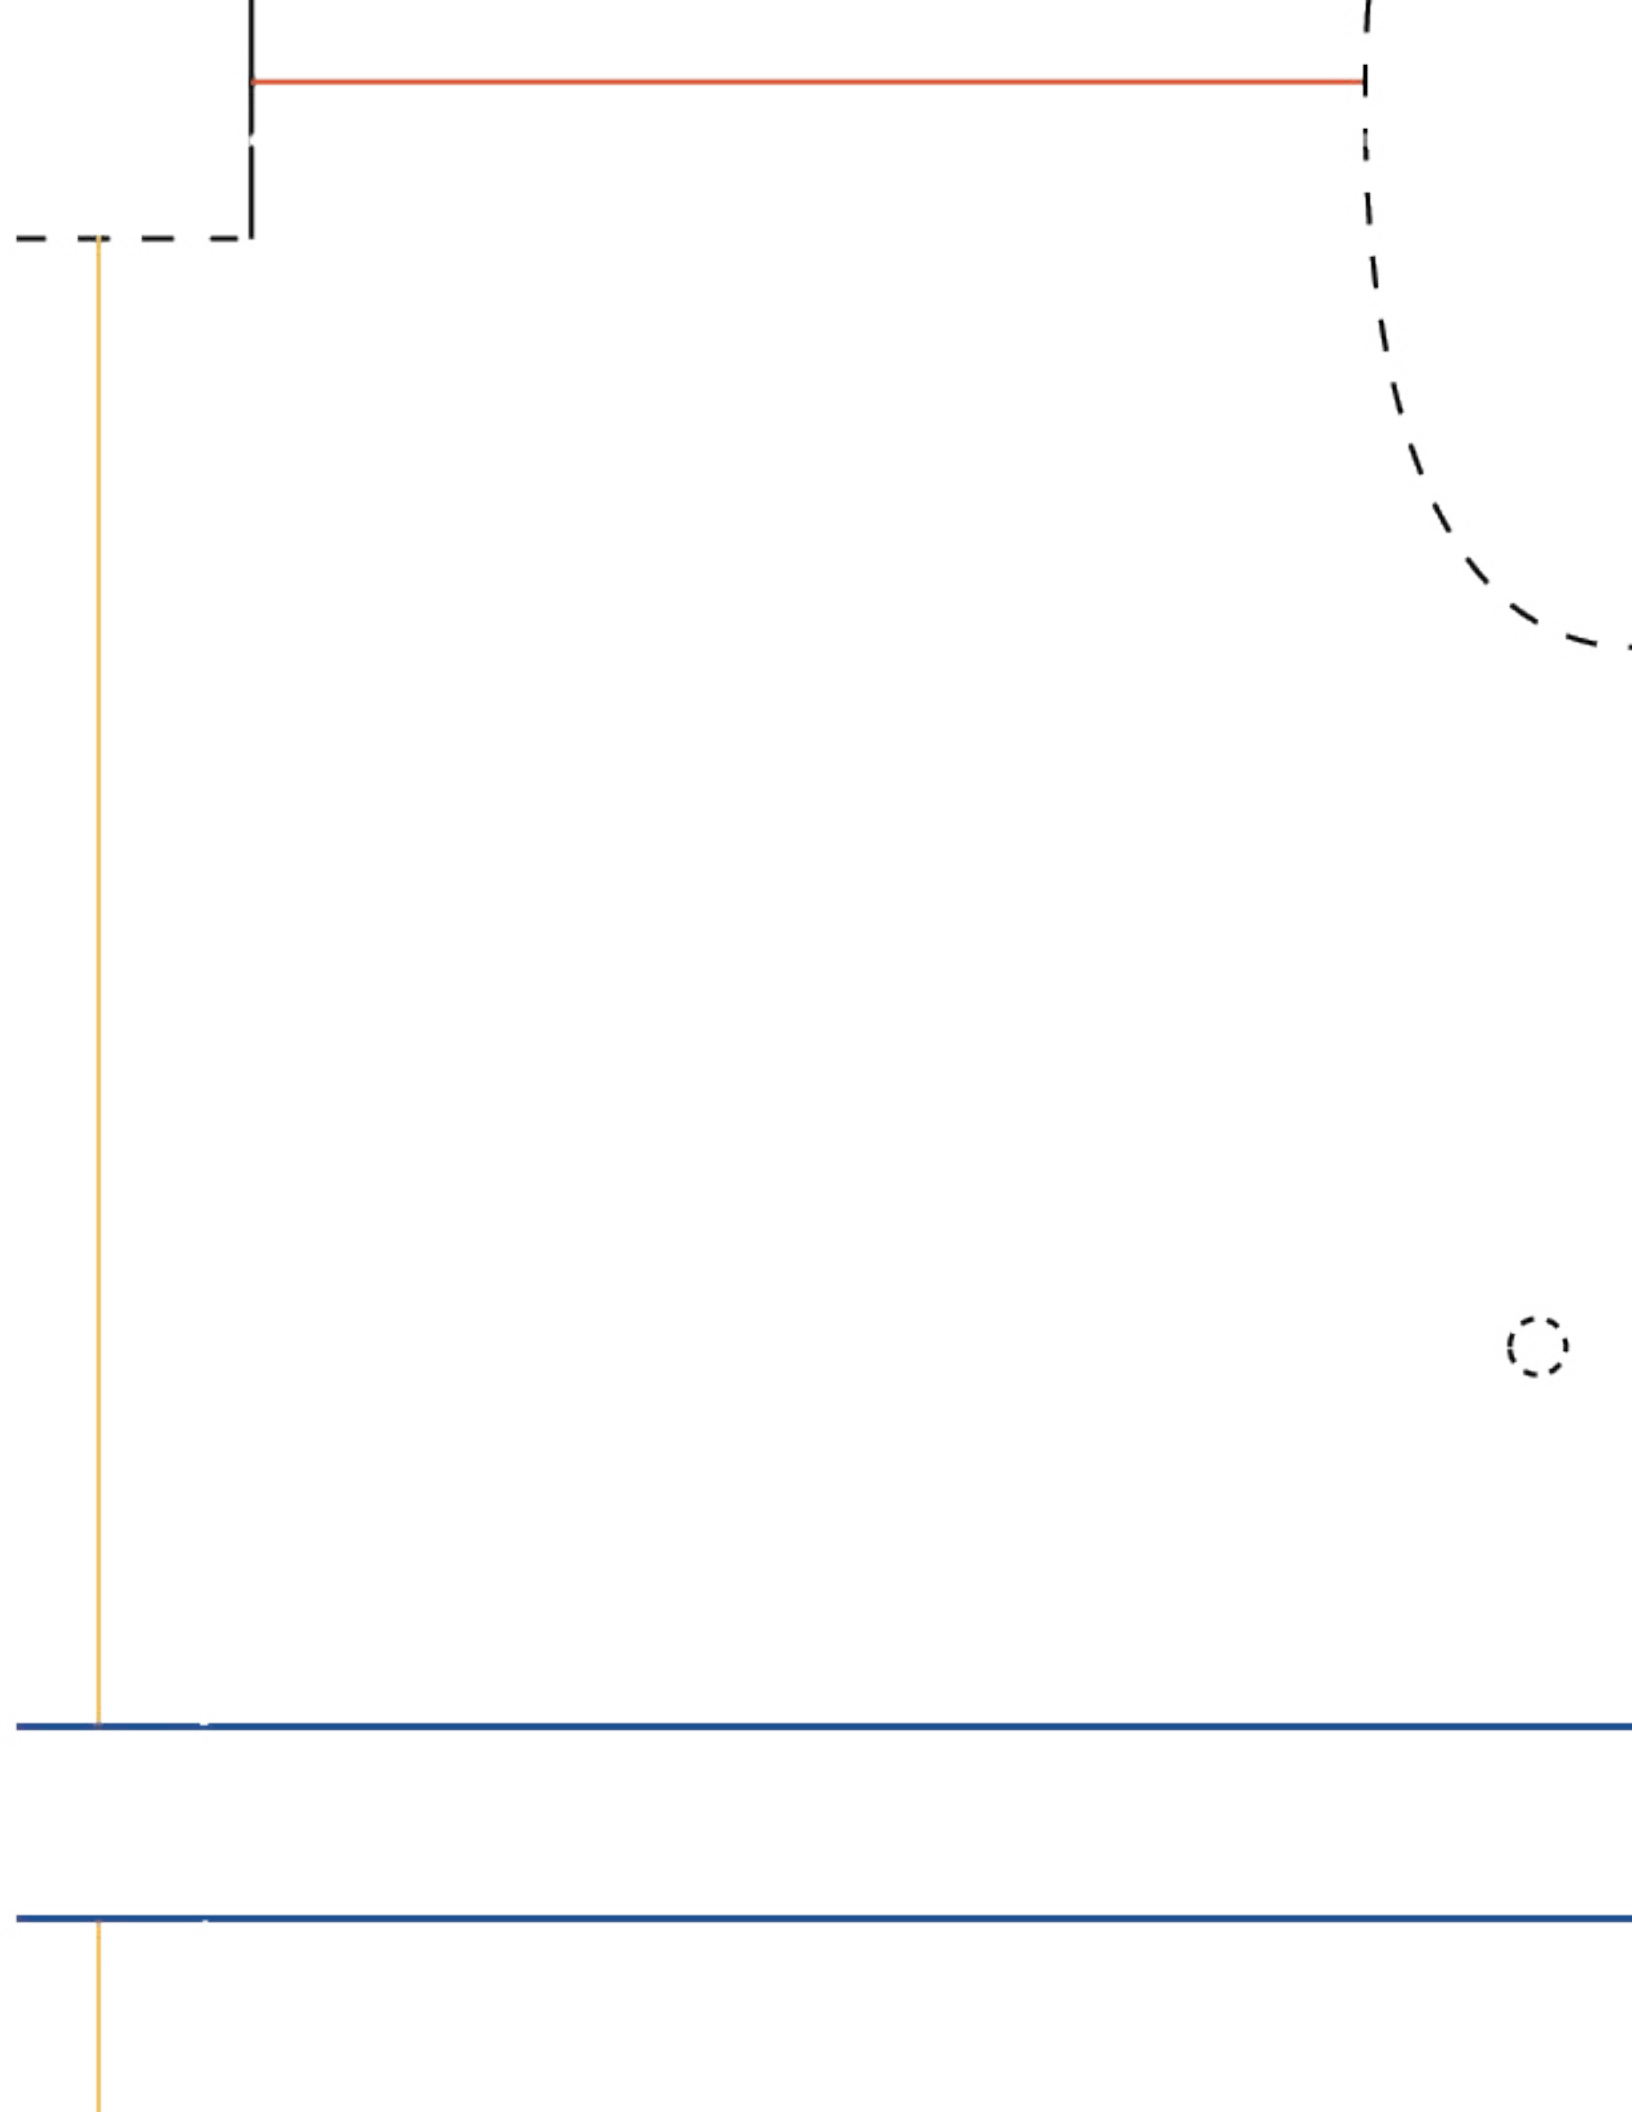

Native American: Your crops are ready to harvest.

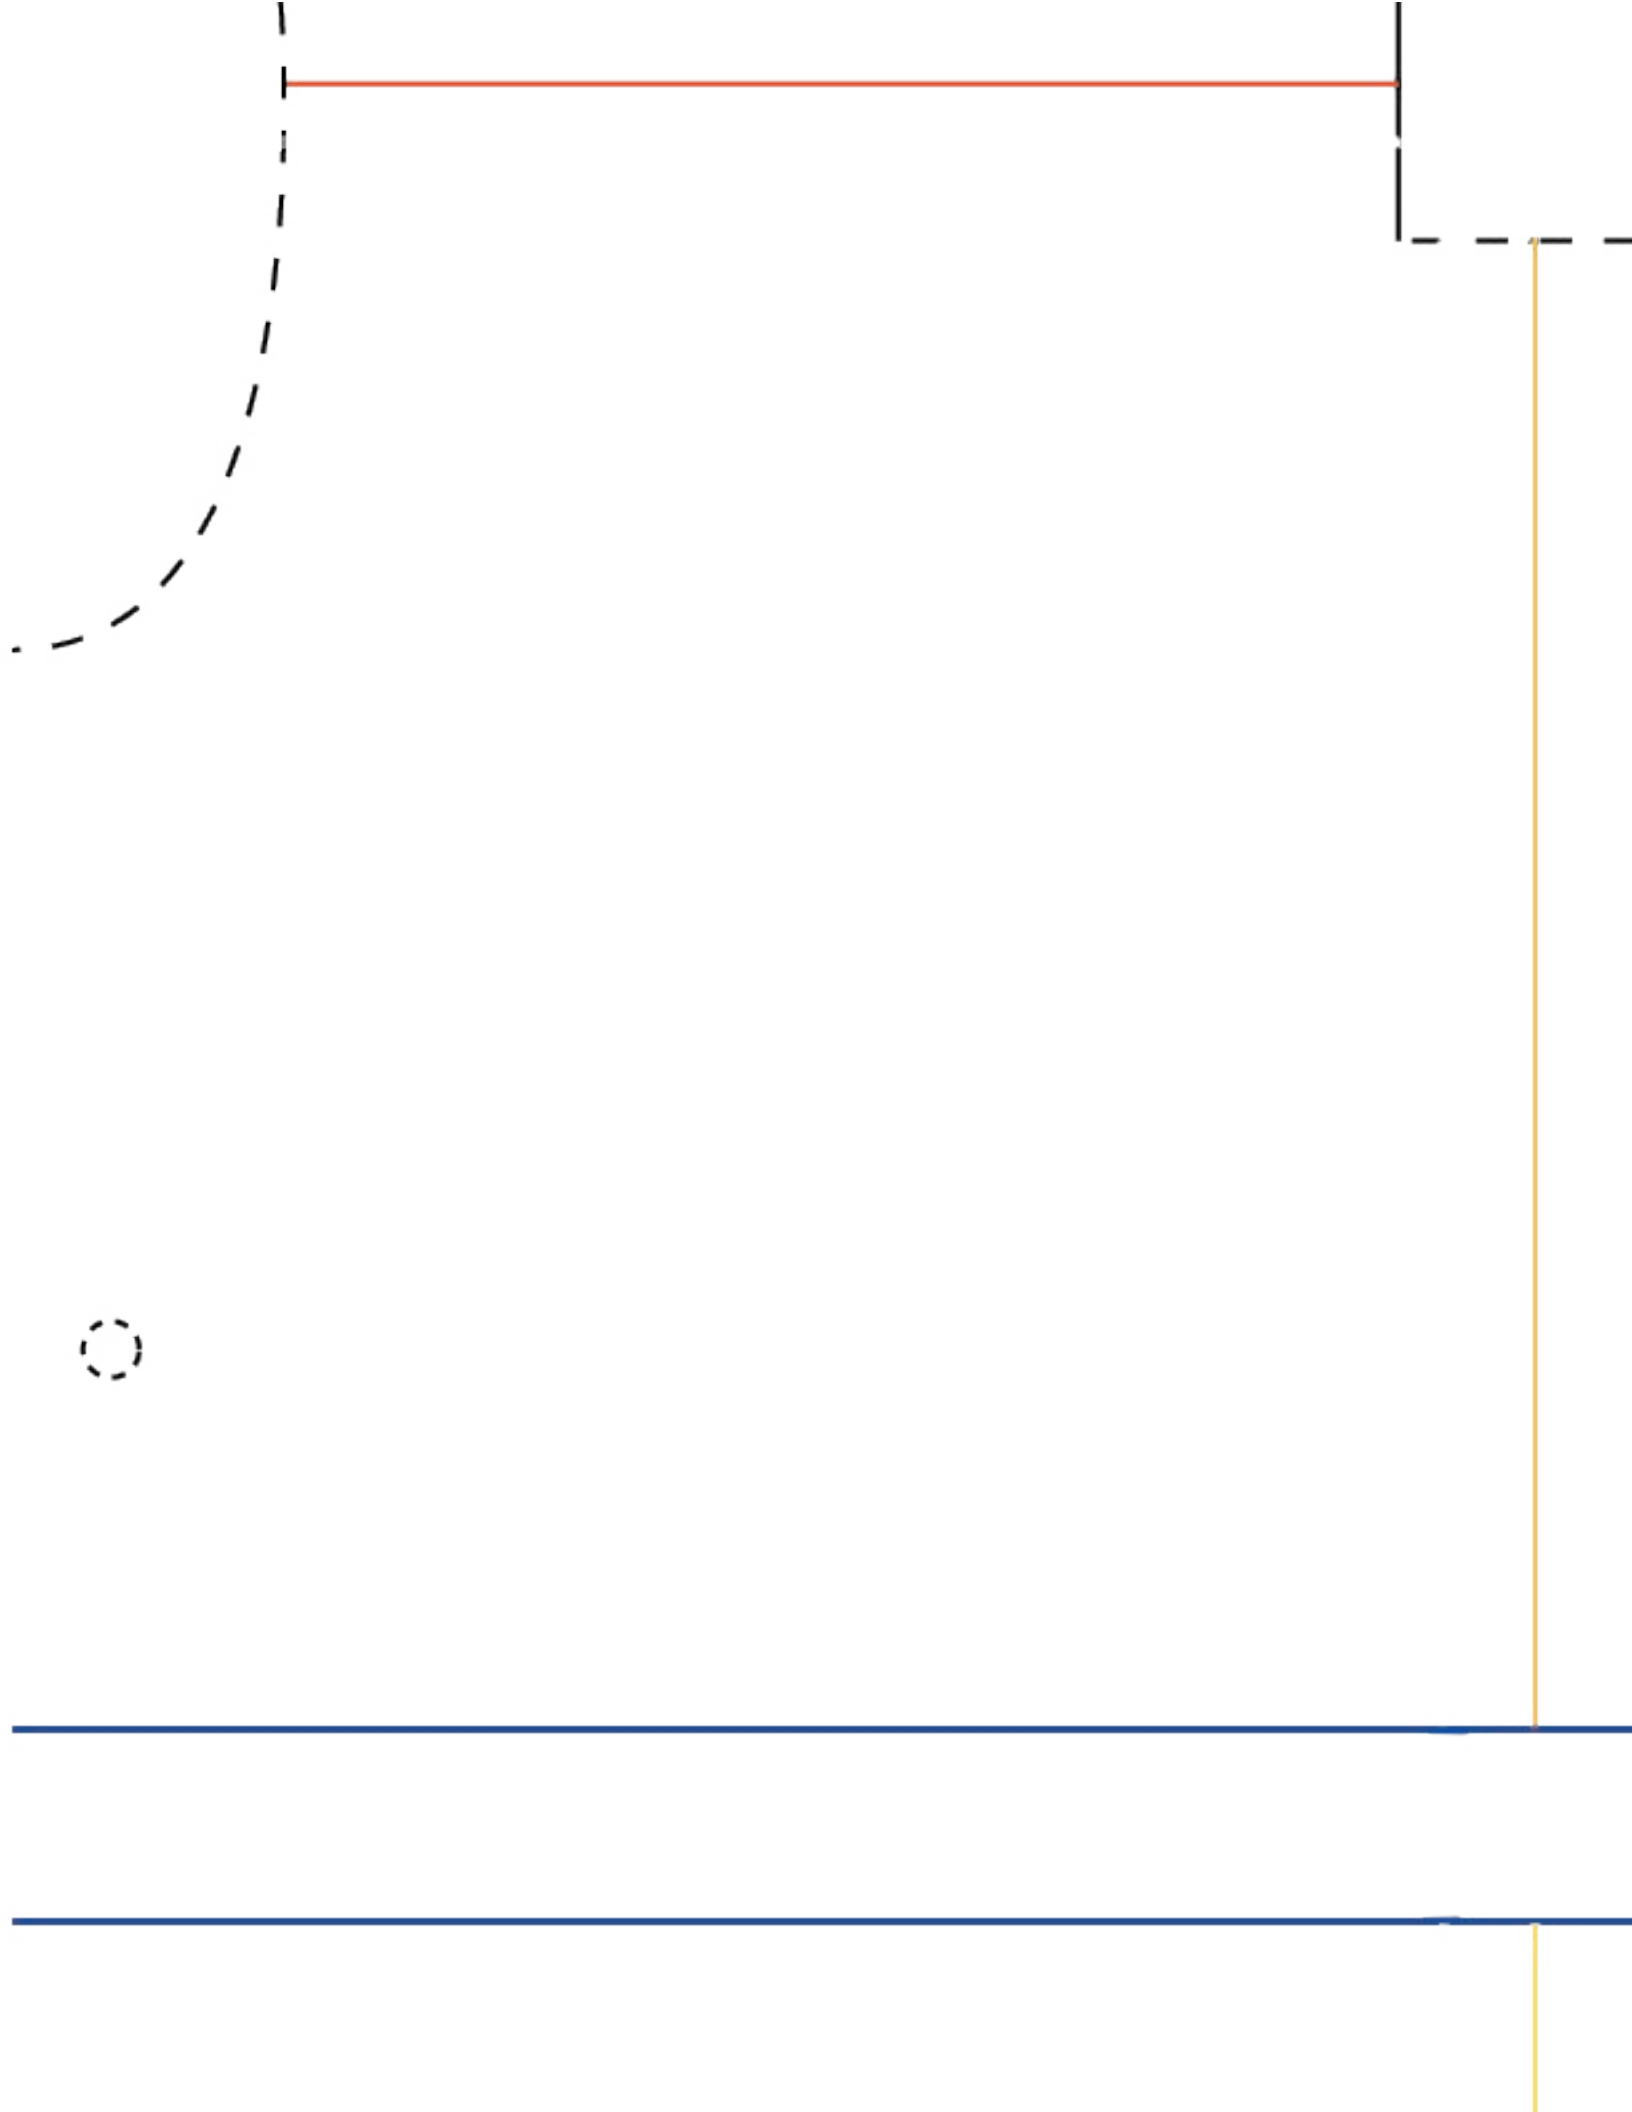

Native American: We will help you pick them!

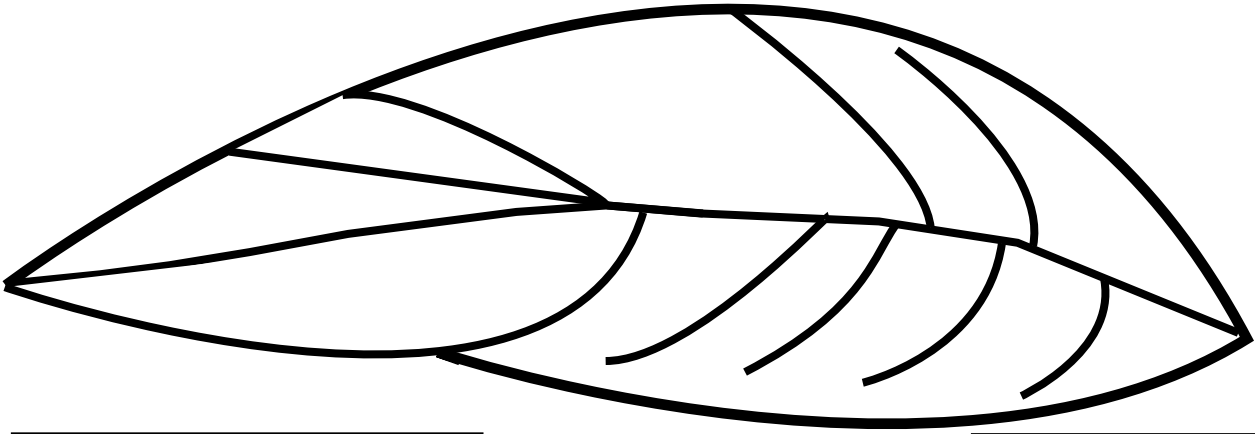

Narrator: As the new Governor, William Bradford set aside a day of feasting every fall at the close of harvest.

Pilgrim: A feast of Thanksgiving to honor God, for without Him we would not be.

Narrator: Our family will live in thanksgiving daily for the many blessings Heavenly Father has given us and will continue to bless us with.
